Comments on “Perceptions of electric scooters prior to legalisation, a case study of Dublin, Ireland, the ‘final frontier’ of adopted e-scooter use in Europe” third revision

The authors have significant revised according to the previous comments. But still, suggest the authors eliminate those few opinions and thoughts at the end of the survey. If these opinions support the descriptive statistics and estimation results presented thus far by providing qualitative findings as the authors state. The way they are presented now is very arbitrary since this is only few opinions and thoughts out of 413 respondents. If these opinions or in fact there are more other similar opinions that do affect the presentation of descriptive statistics and estimation results the authors should combine all the opinions, merge and digest them when the descriptive statistics and estimation results are presented. Listing the opinions and thoughts individually is not necessary and the readers still do know how do these opinion and thoughts affect the descriptive and estimation results?
