Review Report

Does the introduction provide sufficient background and include all relevant references?
The Introduction section of the manuscript provides the theoretical background of the research.

Is the research design appropriate?
This research design is appropriate for the Journal's profile.

Are the methods adequately described?
The section Materials and Methods is described in a complete, detailed, and simple way. Only note: the The Materials and Methods section precedes Coclusion section and follows the Results and Conclusions sections. This provision of the paragraphs complicates the understanding of the scientific article..

Are the results clearly presented?
In the Results section, the analysis results are described in a prominent, concise, and precise manner. In addition, even the figures help significantly understand the results.

Are the conclusions supported by the results?
The manuscript provides essential conclusions and implications in the section “Discussions.”
The conclusions are supported by the results, which are widely discussed quantitatively and qualitatively.